

It had been with arduous contemplation and preparation of epic proportions that I had come to plan my journey across the Old Continents.

I had endured the laborious task of pouring over maps and literature, many of which were located in various far-off libraries to which often I had been required to travel in order to locate particular sought-after and necessary resources. Similarly, I had spent many nights wandering from tavern to tavern in search of the counsel of those better-travelled; those who had endured the bitter cold of the most northern of points, or the blistering depths of the desert.

It was then that a thought occurred to me: what if there existed a place where one could seek the advice of an expert while his finger simultaneously trailed the creases of the world's most rare and detailed maps? A place where intrepid explorers and travellers - old and new - could plan journeys, tame or perilous? A place explorers would make merry over tipples collected from all corners of the globe, exhibiting flavours and spices they thought that they would never come to encounter? Should such a place exist, it surely could be a society based fundamentally on one's yearning for the unknown - The Society of Exploration.

Phileas F. Fogg, Esq.

Founder of The Society of Exploration.

The Mechanical Mixologist

It was during my time visiting the Americas, frequenting the establishments of Jerry P. Thomas, that I first tasted the perfect Negroni. The secrets of this fine cocktail had been imparted to the "Professor" during his famous silver-tool-toting tour of Europe, during which his services had been employed by the great General Pascal-Olivier de Negroni, Comte de Negroni, creator of this delightful libation, at the said gentleman's liberation party (recently having been freed from the grasp of the Prussian forces).

Upon my return, I sought a person capable of recreating Jerry's Negroni, but, alas, neither man nor monkey was successful. It was then that it occurred to me that I was in need of something absent from the capabilities of man: replicable, unwavering consistency. I required a machine able to work to a precise specification every time, without fail; a contraption of an industrial nature; a cocktail compounder.

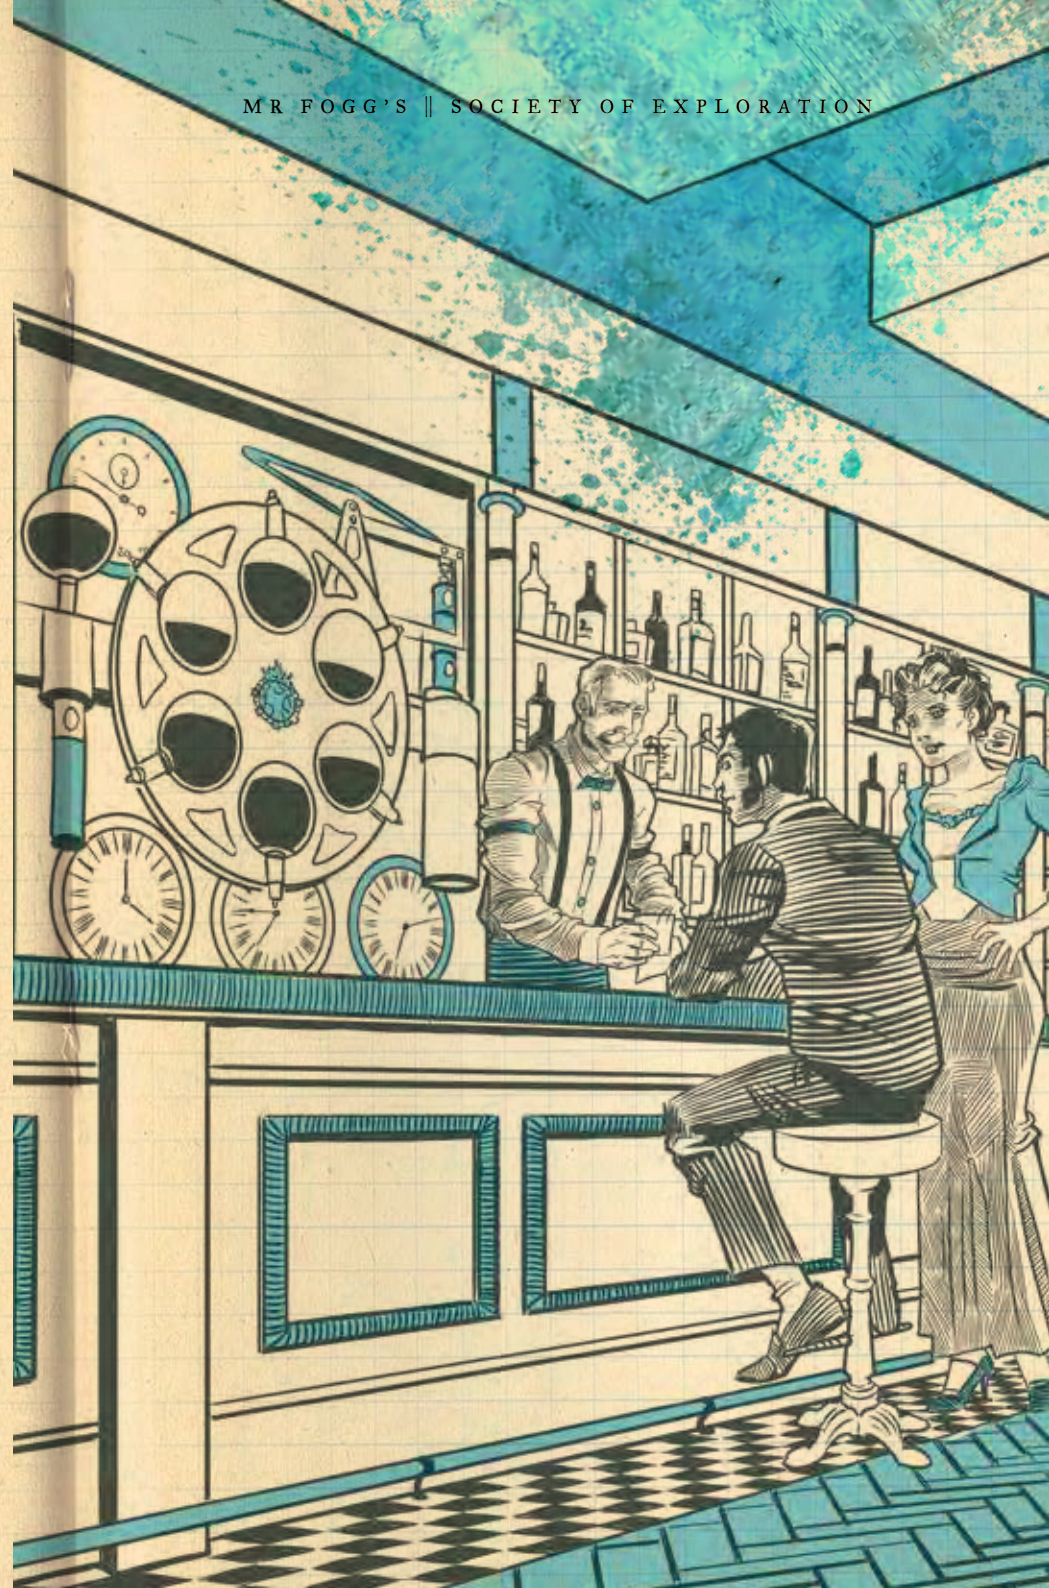

Thus was she born: The Mechanical Mixologist.
