CYCLING IN STYLE...

As Fogg rolled along, the cobbled roads posed no challenge to his front wheel, as tall as a grown man. His penny farthing companion, Atticus Attleberry, coasted beside him. The afternoon sun tried to light the street, but smoke from Pall Mall's towering residences nearly blocked it. A sliver of light touched Attleberry's face, stirring melancholy in Fogg as he departed his beloved London.

UP, UP, AND AWAY...

*Following his journey across the Channel in Jules Legrand's hot air balloon, Le Papillon, Fogg encountered an unforeseen challenge.
The blustery Parisian winds whirled Le Papillon* out of control, hurling Fogg straight out of the carriage door. Luckily, in the nick of time, he clutched onto a flailing rope, and the hot-headed Frenchman was able to gank him up to safety.

THE GOOD LIFE...

Fogg was on his way to Constantinople aboard the Orient Express, passing through the Italian Alps. Beside him sat the renowned luthier Ms. Genova. He kept his composure, avoiding eye contact by focusing on the scenery outside. The pine chalets in the valley, the flowers, and a lone shepherd guiding white dots across the slopes warmed him. He imagined returning, meeting the locals, sampling delicacies, sitting on a log with Giovanna on his lap, the valley beneath him, reflecting on his voyage around the world.

TRUDGING ON...

Fogg and his men were cloaked in white gowns, accompanied by the famous spice merchant, Yara Nassar, draped in orange and green. Sand dunes rolled off into the distance. The violently oppressive sun made the Spice City on the horizon seem an impossible journey away. But the caravan persevered and trudged on.

ALL ABOARD...

Fogg called out with all his might "BERG!" to which Mac Murphy, who had been snoozing in the afternoon sun after a boozy night on deck, rocketed out of bed, skidded across the lobby, hurled himself up the stairs, out through the door and assessed the course of the boat. It was only after he swung the ship starboard side that he realised he had forgotten to dress himself in his slumber following his sudden awakening.

DARN SPOKES...

The Arizona Sun slipped behind the hoodoos, faintly lighting Fogg, his horses, and the cart's broken wheel.

Ms. Coppersmith, who joined Fogg in Alabama, knelt by glowing logs, smoke curling from the embers. The horses huddled, bewildered. Tools and timber lay scattered around Fogg. He felt lucky not to be alone in this situation.
