17TH CENTURY

Gin's history can be traced back to the illustrious 17th century where it began in the Netherlands as a juniper-based herbal medicine known as genever, primarily used for its perceived medicinal properties, such as aiding digestion and treating ailments. Dutch soldiers, seeking solace and valour, quaffed genever from flasks, bestowing them with the esteemed title of "Dutch Courage." The craft of gin-making found itself entangled within the humble confines of bathtubs, leading to the notorious "Gin Craze" that swept the land with an air of recklessness. Amidst this spirited fervour, tea emerged as a cherished beverage, captivating the palates of discerning individuals.
